CAC to hold Truth in Taxation hearing May 19 at Signal Peak Campus

In compliance with section 15-1461.01, Arizona Revised Statutes, the Pinal County Community College District (PCCCD, also known as Central Arizona College) is notifying its property taxpayers of PCCCD's intention to raise its primary property taxes over last year's level. PCCCD is proposing an increase in primary property taxes of $17,703,139 or 45.4 percent.

For example, the proposed tax increase will cause PCCCD's primary property taxes on a $100,000 home to increase from $189.64 (total taxes that would be owed without the proposed tax increase) to $275.68 (total proposed taxes including the tax increase).

This proposed increase is exclusive of increased primary property taxes received from new construction. The increase is also exclusive of any changes that may occur from property tax levies for voter approved bonded indebtedness or budget and tax overrides.

All interested citizens are invited to attend the public hearing on the tax increase that is scheduled to be held May 19, 2015 at 6 p.m. in the Student Services (M) Building at the Signal Peak Campus of Central Arizona College. The campus is located at 8470 N. Overfield Road, Coolidge, Ariz. 85128.

Superior High School students attend mock

By Nina Crowder Superior Sun

Superior High School students recently attended a Mock DUI event where they watched a simulated DUI accident that included a talk by Pinal County District Attorney Landos Voyles.

Voyles told the attendee's, "Someone told me a long time ago, before you make a decision, stop for just a second to think about the consequences. In this scenario right here, the person driving made a wrong decision or didn't think about the consequences. Right now, you guys are young folk this is the best kind of advice and it will get better as you get older so make the good choices." This is a real scenario that happens daily, making the right decisions will help to insure a safe future.

Elizabeth Magallanez with the Substance Abuse Coalition and Mel Martinez, volunteer firefighter worked many hours to coordinate this special event for the youth at Superior High School. Some of the students dressed as dead people as a memorial to the ones who have passed on. Students that participated in the Mock accident were painted up so the injuries looked very real and acted hurt or dead. It was a good turn out and the youth really listened to the speakers and watched some of the difficult tasks the firemen, police and medical technicians have to perform during an actual accident.

Local school districts marshaling on in wake of

Override revenues ease some of the hurt; JTED cuts could reduce tech courses at high schools

By James Hodl Copper Area News

Despite the Arizona legislature allocating fewer dollars for education in its fiscal 2016 budget, area school superintendents are not entirely long-faced about the future.

"The Oracle Elementary School District (OESD) is in decent, though not great, shape due to voter enactment of the 15 percent M&O (Maintenance and Operational) budget override last November," said OESD Superintendent Dennis Blauser.

But over at the Ray Unified School District (RUSD) in Kearny, the fact that per-pupil school funds are allocated a year in advance will help as declining enrollment enables the district to divvy up the funds for departed student among existing ones, said RUSD Superintendent Curt Cook. "It takes some of the sting off the reduced state allocations," he said.

Over at San Manuel High School in San Manuel, the school is still assessing the situation and has no comment at this time.

Under the fiscal 2016 Education Budget, the legislature voted to increase classroom spending by 1.6 percent but to cut non-instruction spending by five percent. Funding for JTED vocational and technical programs also were slashed by $30 million (a 7.5 percent reduction). And while funding for community colleges in Maricopa County were slashed to zero, those in Pinal County will continue to receive $2 million in state support thanks to the political maneuvering of state representatives T.J. Shope and Frank Pratt (16th District) and Doug Coleman (8th District).

"Thanks to more revenues provided by the override and the 1.6 percent hike in classroom spending, OESD will be able to supply its students with more in-classroom materials and well as make other improvements," Blauser said. "These include updating school buses and working toward providing every student with a computer."

OESD also is looking toward the future.

"Oracle is on the verge of growth in local business sector. This will expand the local tax base, which benefit school financing," he added.

"But despite a lot of things going well, running schools in this era of frugal funding will still be challenging and we will need to make every dollar count," Blauser said.

Under the recently enacted state Education Budget, RUSD will have $123 more to spend on each student in the classroom, Cook said. In that the district has declining enrollment (it had 30 fewer students this year than last) the per-pupil spending might be a little more.

"RUSD currently has a $100,000 deficit to pay, but it would have been a $400,000 deficit without the M&O override that passed in recent years," Cook explained.

Still the declining value of local houses reduces the tax base under which property taxes can be levied, making it harder to plan future district budgets, he added.

"I believe at RUSD have been excellent stewards of the money we receive. We have made sure that every dollar has had a purpose, but if the state continues to reduce funding, we may have to cut programs," Cook noted.

Cook added that RUSD needs some capital improvements and may have to float a bond issue in the near future.

While RUSD continues to consider joining a JTED (Joint Technical Education District), the one serving San Manuel High School is contemplating closing some programs as a result of the $30 million reduction in funding voted by legislators.

"These cuts reduce the amount of per-pupil funding for students enrolled in JTED and CTE (Career and Technical Education) programs to the point where local school districts would lose money needed to support these programs in their schools," said Alan Storm, superintendent of the Pima JTED.

There are currently 24,000 students enrolled in Pima JTED programs at high schools throughout Pima County and in the Pinal County towns of San Manuel and Rio Rico. The organization offers 50 CTE programs, the most popular of which are Automotive Technology, Information Technology, Engineering, Culinary Arts, Media and Graphic Communications, Nursing, and Precision Manufacturing.

"Under the approved Education Budget, economics will once again necessitate closing programs that were brought back at the urging of business owners and parents alike.

Students at Cobre Valley Institute of Technology study Fire Science at Gila Community College. Superior and Hayden-Winkelman School Districts are members of the CVIT JTED.

legislators voting cuts in education funding

This will cut off career opportunities for many students, not to mention the loss of trained workers for local employers," Storm said.

"The timing of the $30 million budget cut (on top of $40 million last year and $50 million in 2011) couldn't be worse," he added. "A substantial number of our nation's skilled workforce is reaching retirement age. By 2017, an estimated 2.5 million new middle-skill manufacturing jobs are expected to be added to the workforce, accounting for nearly 40 percent of all job growth.

"How will Arizona attract businesses if we lack a skilled workforce?" Storm asked.

The Pima JTED was created at the request of local business people in 2006. At their further request, Pima JTED would like to create new courses in Robotics and Diesel Technology, for which graduates will find jobs in a reviving mining industry.

Like public schools, charter schools also had their fiscal 2016 funding cut by $3 million by the legislature. However lawmakers also approved a bill signed by Gov.

Ducey guaranteeing $24 in state cash to back loans charter schools take out for getting started and building facilities.

The fiscal 2016 Education Budget also trims state funding for the three state universities (University of Arizona, Arizona State and Northern Arizona University) by $99 million (a 14.5 percent reduction from the previous year). The cuts could result in further hikes in university tuitions, although Gov. Ducey is urging the Board of Regents to make all the cuts in administrative salaries.

Our Local Officials Offer Their Opinions on the State of Educational Funding

o how do our elected officials see the current state of educational funding as it affects Pinal County and surrounding areas?

We took those questions to 13 officers holding positions in the state legislature and Pinal County government. We received replies from State Sen. Barbara McGuire (D-District 16), State Rep. T.J. Shope (R-District 16) and Pinal County Supervisor Pete Rios (District 1). Their answers are as follows:

Question: What is your opinion on the Education Budget enacted in early March by the Arizona state legislature?

McGuire: "The enacted budget continues the pattern of severe underfunding of our K-12 schools, community colleges and universities. The responsible approach to the budget crisis would have been for the Governor to work across the aisle and address the many education budget challenges in a bi-partisan manner. Unfortunately, this is not the path he has chosen. Pinal County schools will continue to face major challenges to putting more dollars in the classroom because they will have to tap funds designated for the classroom to cope with increased fixed costs and emergency repairs and maintenance."

Shope: "The impact of the budget on K-12 schools throughout Pinal County will vary from district to district. In the Coolidge Unified School District for example, certified personnel (teachers) were recently given a 5% salary increase. I had spoken to superintendents from across our legislative district throughout the budget process as well as public charter school operators and I believe we incorporated some reasonable requests into the budget that will make the funding adjustments much more feasible."

Rios: "Education absolutely took a big hit in the new budget. They may have earmarked more money for the classroom but these increases were peeled away like an onion elsewhere in the budget so that school districts ultimately end up deeper in the hole. For some districts, if they see any additional funding at all it will be due to growth in student attendance."

Ouestion: What about Pinal County community colleges getting state funding while community colleges in Maricopa and Pima counties losing all funding?

Shope: "Pinal County is obviously a different animal than Maricopa or Pima Counties. Ultimately, Representatives Coleman and Pratt joined my efforts to ensure that Pinal County's Community College District wouldn't suffer the same fate as Maricopa and Pima. We were successful because we were able to convince our colleagues in Phoenix that our tax base is radically different than the tax base of the two most populous counties in the state and therefore, we shouldn't have taken the same percentage of adjustment as they did."

Both McGuire and Rios said they are glad that Rep. Shope and the two other Pinal County representatives were able to save some money for the county's community colleges.

Question: What about that lawsuit in which a judge ruled that the legislature was in violation of a 2000 voterapproved referendum setting levels of school funding through 2021? How should the state proceed?

McGuire: "Legislative leadership should stop stonewalling the settlement process and come to the table and negotiate a settlement in good faith. The plaintiffs in the lawsuit have been willing to negotiate since the very first ruling in their favor. I favor fully restoring the base level funding formula to the court ordered level. This would mean an additional $336,500,000 going directly into our schools; however, due to the budget constraints we are under I am in favor of phasing this increase in over a two or three year time horizon. The compromise you speak of would likely be doable if the legislature leadership would come to the table and negotiate."

Shope: "My opinion on the lawsuit is the same as it has been since the first verdict was announced and that is that I hope both sides can continue to negotiate a reasonable settlement that doesn't imperil every single other agency in state government but until that point, the appeals process should be allowed to play out."

Rios: "The court order isn't going away. Under the voter referendum, school spending should have gone up $316 million. The back pay order tops $1 billion. Affected parties need to work towards a compromise, as I don't believe the state can get rid of the referendum's mandate unless the people vote to reverse it themselves."

Question: Were the budget cuts for JTED (Joint Technical Education Districts) and CTE (Career and Technical Training) programs justified?

Shope: "I am a strong believer in vocational education and it is my desire to bring back full funding of vocational education in the next budget cycle when our revenues should be in much better shape. There are plenty of vocational education advocates in the Republican Caucus and I know that when

Superior schools expect to weather latest state budget cuts thanks to November override approval

By James Hodl Copper Area News

Voter approval last November of the 15 percent M&O (Maintenance and Operational) override will lessen the negative impact on the fiscal 2016 Education Budget enacted this spring by the Arizona legislature, according to Cindy Benson, board president of the Superior Unified School District (SUSD).

"Had the override allowing Superior to raise property taxes to raise additional revenues to provide a 15 percent increase over state-provided M&O school expenditures, Superior school would have been hurt immediately," Benson said. "Now SUSD has time to consider more surgical cuts in its budget that do not impact the quality of classroom education."

Under the fiscal 2016 Education Budget, the legislature voted to increase classroom spending by 1.6 percent but to cut non-instruction spending by 5 percent. Funding for JTED vocational and technical programs also were slashed by $30 million (a 7.5 percent reduction). And while funding for community colleges in Maricopa County were slashed to zero, those in Pinal County will continue to receive $2 million in state support thanks to the political maneuvering of state representatives T.J. Shope and Frank Pratt (16th District) and Doug Coleman (8th District).

The ability to have an override source of additional revenue is proving critical in Pinal County in weathering the latest round of state school funding cuts. Where overrides were enacted anew, school districts such as Superior and the Oracle Elementary School District have funding sources that for now lessen the fiscal pain. In towns where overrides were rejected by voters and are nearing or at zero override funding, more drastic cuts are being considered and approved.

Because of the state funding cuts, school boards in Apache Junction and Coolidge have voted to go to four-day school weeks, which trim expenses related to student transportation and food service are trimmed by 20 percent, as related employees are no longer needed for five days. But students do not lose classroom time as the Friday hours are distributed equally to the other four weekdays, extending the school day by about two hours.

There are no immediate plans for SUSD to go to a four-day week, but the school board is studying the idea, Benson said. Being in a poor rural area with a declining population, SUSD will in the future face further revenue loss as state funding is allocated on a per student basis, Benson said. The board will have to devise ways to maintain educational quality on fewer dollars in the foreseeable future.

The four-day school week is already a reality in the Hayden-Winkelman Unified School District (HWUSD) and now with further reductions in state education funding more cuts are going to have to be made, said Superintendent Jeff Gregorich. Rural school districts with declining enrollment have been hurting since state budget cutting began in 2009, but the recent cuts now even the big districts are hurting, he noted.

"When originally faced with a budget cut, you rally the staff with a call for doing more with less money, and everyone gets enthusiastic about accomplishing the goal. But when you do it four or five years in a row, the message gets awfully stale," Gregorich said.

Six weeks after Gov. Doug Ducey signed the fiscal 2016

But Hayden-Winkelman district looking for further economies to get by with fewer state dollars

Education Budget, HWUSD is still examining its options and to where additional economies can be wrung from school operations, and it all has left Gregorich disappointed.

"All this budget cutting is sad and short-sighted," Gregorich said. "We need to invest in our children for the future of the state. What good is cutting taxes to attract business to the state when one of the things businesses want most is an educated workforce and they see how little we prize education?

"The current budget may give extra money on one budget line but takes more funding away on the next line," he added.

Some belt tightening due to state budget cuts also is expected in the JTED (Joint Technical Education Districts) programs offered to students at their local high schools and the central vocational school, Cobre Valley Institute of Technology (CVIT) based in Globe. Some JTED programs available to high school students in Superior, Hayden and Winkelman also are offered at Gila Community College in Globe.

"Like other JTEDs in Arizona, the state Education Budget cuts will hinder our ability to continue current vocational and technological programs in their current form," said Beata Tarasiuk, CVIT executive program director.

"Past budget cuts have been disastrous. We lost funding for programs taken by ninth graders in 2011. And each year since we have had to do with fewer dollars, to the point we need every current penny to continue programs that our JTED students need. And now we are faced with a 7.5 percent reduction in funding for the overall JTED programs and a 50 percent reduction in revenues for the programs offered at participating high schools," Tarasiuk explained.

"We will just have to adjust to the new reality," she added.
The CVIT JTED currently offers a broad selection of vocational education programs. The most popular are Construction Trades, Nursing and Medical Assistance. But CVIT also offers programs in Agriculture, Fire Science, Welding and Geology related to mining. And CVIT is looking into creating a course in Modern Mining Techniques, now the Resolution Copper has announced plans to use robotics to mine copper near Superior.

our revenues come in as projected, we will show our commitment to vocational education."

McGuire: "No, we are not doing enough. Students who participate in CTE actually have a higher high school graduation rate than peer students and many graduate from high school with the skills necessary to find gainful employment in the workplace upon graduation."

Rios: "Although JTED districts took a $30 million hit in funding, things could have been worse. What state officials should be considering is why any business would want to come to Arizona if we do not have an educated workforce."

Ouestion: Is going to a four-day school week as

Question: Is going to a four-day school week as some districts are doing an acceptable way for school districts to trim non-classroom expenses?

McGuire: "I am not in favor of the four day school week. The school day is long enough already and the longer day will make it more difficult for teachers to keep students engaged. Additionally, the four day week imposes an undue burden on working parents who would have to find childcare for their children while they are at work."

Shope: "I am an advocate of local school districts being able to make decisions that they feel will help their schools succeed. If a four-day week is a way to save dollars, then I believe it should be considered. I can tell you from the research that I have seen is that it does save money while at the same time, it does not harm the instructional value of education."

As for the future, McGuire said, "After years of underfunding our education system, the challenge is so great that only bi-partisan problem solving and a willingness to look at the revenue side of the budget will truly begin to address the challenge. If the legislature is unwilling to do the job, the voters should do it for them. The teacher retention crisis is caused in part by low salaries but is also exacerbated by the heavy workload brought on by large class sizes. We are losing the numerical equivalent of a 100% turnover in classroom teachers every three to five years so if we don't get our arms around this problem it is hard to see how we get about the job of increasing student achievement."

Schools measuring student achievement with new AzMERIT exams

tudents throughout Arizona have for the first time this spring been taking a new exam to measure their mastery of mathematics and English/Language Arts. As a result, school districts throughout the Southeast Valley and Pinal County are not only deciding on which format they will offer the test but also acquire the equipment necessary to provide it.

The AZMERIT (Arizona's Measurement of Educational Readiness to Inform Teaching) test replaces the AIMS (Arizona's Instrument to Measure Standards) test, which measured student proficiency in the same categories through the tenth grade. Students in the fourth and eighth grades will continue to take the AIMS Science exam until an upgraded AZMERIT version is developed.

To give students, teachers and schools time to adapt to the new format of AZMERIT and its potential questions, this year's test results will not be applied toward school and district A-to-F letter grades and teacher evaluations.

Based on practice tests administered earlier this year, it is known that vocabulary skills will be a bigger part of the English/Language tests. Knowing what is covered on the 2015 AZMERIT tests will enable teachers to better prepare students for next year's tests.

AzMERIT tests also will be offered in two formats: the traditional pencil-and-paper tests and one conducted online through a laptop computer. The Arizona Department of Education (ADE) is encouraging school districts to try both formats. Yet some districts plan to go 100 percent computerized with the tests. These include the Coolidge Unified School District, the Queen Creek Unified School District, the Ray Unified School District (RUSD) in Kearny, and the Superior Unified School District.

According to Curt Cook, RUSD superintendent, "Students today are extremely computer savvy so they shouldn't find an online exam hard to comprehend. As we intend on using the computer/online exam exclusively in the future, this year's exam will get them used to the format."

The Florence Unified School District (FUSD) will offer most AzMERIT tests in the computerized format, owing to the District's decision back in 2007 that all students should have a laptop for classroom use. However, Chris Knudson, FUSD assistant superintendent, said some students will take the AzMERIT paper test on request.

The J. O. Combs Unified School District in San Tan Valley will conduct the online test at the Combs Middle School and Combs Traditional Academy, while it's other schools with have the pencil-and-paper test. The Oracle Elementary School District likewise will offer both AzMERIT test format to students, though based on signups more will be taking the online test. Most school districts report already having the equipment to offer the online exam and thus will incur no additional outlays.

offer the online exam and thus will incur no additional outlays But the Combs District reported having to purchase headphones for the English/Language Arts section and anticipate that next year it will need to purchase additional graphing calculators.

"Students will require specialized training on the graphing calculators as they use these types of calculators in their current math classes," said Gayle Blanchard, Combs superintendent.

RUSD's Cook reported having to acquire up to 60 additional laptops so that all of its students can take the online exam.

Only the Hayden-Winkelman Unified School District will administer the pencil-and-paper exam to all its students. But Superintendent Jeff Gregorich said he hopes to upgrade school facilities to be able to administer the online exam in the future.

For now it appears that the AZMERIT exams will be administered in Arizona schools for more than one year. Legislation that would have allowed parents to opt their children out of such testing failed during the 2015 session of the state legislature.

Another bill that would have allowed Arizona school districts choose from a menu of student achievement tests rather than just AZMERIT also failed in the Arizona House of Representatives. The measure was proposed by state Superintendent of Public Instruction Diane Douglas.

"A one-size-fits-all approach to state testing in not the best way to truly measure student success," Douglas said in mid-March. "As a national leader in school choice, Arizona is better suited to a system that allows schools to select a test based on how they teach their students.

The measure failed when it was learned that not having a standardized statewide measure of student achievement could cost Arizona $582 million in federal educational funds.

High school class of 2017: Bone up on Civics if you want to graduate s the first bill he signed into law, Gov. Doug Ducey chose a measure that requires all Arizona student to pass a Civics Test before they can graduate from high school. The requirement, which takes effect with the graduating class of 2017, also gives students multiple chances to earn the passing grade.

The exam will cover the same 100 questions asked by the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) to immigrants seeking to become naturalized citizens. But while during the naturalization interview candidates are asked only 10 of the questions selected at random, with a requirement they answer six correctly; Arizona students will receive all 100 questions, of which they must get 60 correct.

All Arizona school districts must offer the Civics Exam, but individual school districts are granted control over how to teach the materials and administer the tests, according to the Arizona Department of Education (ADE). The cost to offer the Civics exams will be "infinitesimal," added State Rep. David Farnsworth (D-16th District), who voted for the law

Most high schools in Maricopa, Pinal and Gila counties offer a standard course entitled "American Government and Free Enterprise," which covers most information about how government operates in the U.S.

However the INS test not only includes questions on government, but also American history and geography. Unlike INS exams from a generation ago, the questions are multiple choice rather than essay. For instance, instead of asking what are the three branches of the federal government (Executive, Legislative and Judiciary), candidates are asked which of four choices is one of the three branches, peppered with alternate answers like parliament.

The test's overall goal is to increase students' knowledge of basic government, said Margaret Bowerman, communications specialist with ADE.
